Product description

Women during menopause begin to experience alterations such as the appearance of hot flashes, sweating and sleeping problems due to the hormonal changes associated with this stage, such as the reduction in the production of estrogens and progesterone.

The hormonal decrease leads to a decrease in blood flow in the pelvic area and, consequently, will cause vaginal dryness, elasticity is reduced and this can cause discomfort and irritation during games and sexual relations.

Menopause should not result in a reduction in sexual activity, nor of course, a decrease in pleasure. In her opinion, the beliefs that associate the cessation of menstruation with the end of a woman's sexual relations are only "examples of a collective imagination full of errors and harms.

The new range of INTENSE sex toys and, specifically, the range of vibrators and clitoral stimulators that have become so popular in recent years, can be allies for women during menopause. "Stimulating the genital area and the clitoris itself means increasing vaginal lubrication, very useful in the face of the dryness caused by the hormonal drop associated with menopause."

Another positive point about using sex toys such as clitoral stimulators is that the stimulation makes the woman more aware of her own body. The only way you can have full sexuality is to become aware of our own body, desires and needs. And many can reconnect with their ability to enjoy themselves through a sex toy.
