"Apium extract", Apiolin has a recognized and proven effect that enhances libido and desire in humans, in addition to favoring physically and strengthening psycho-emotional behavior.

Scientists claim that the micronized root contains androstenone and androstenol. that directly influences sexual behavior, improving the response to stimuli.
Group B vitamins: They are an essential constituent in the human diet and help reduce fatigue, in addition to improving mental capacity.

Taurine: Taurine is a non-essential amino acid and produced naturally by the body. Under certain circumstances the body uses taurine reserves and these may not be enough. Taurine accelerates recovery from muscle fatigue and preserves muscle power during effort.

L-Carnitine: Carnitine is an amino acid that provides activity, even greater than testosterone. Carnitine improves sexual desire and satisfaction; It is effective in improving erectile dysfunction, orgasm and sexual well-being.

Gingseng: plant from northeast Asia. Its roots in traditional Chinese medicine have been known for its positive effects on the human body for more than 5,000 years. Known to increase libido, it has antioxidant properties. Its generic name “Panax” is derived from the Greek words pan, meaning “all,” and Akos, meaning “heals.” Panax (in Spanish: Panacea) is therefore a universal remedy. Ginseng is above all a stimulant of the nervous system, increasing physical and mental strength. It is appreciated for providing greater resistance to various types of stress. The European Commission and the World Health Organization recognize the use of ginseng to tone the body of tired or weakened people. Ginseng has been extensively researched. Its main bioactive components are ginsenosides, with multiple beneficial effects that were demonstrated experimentally, especially their anti-inflammatory and antioxidant properties.

Guarana: This tropical plant (Paullinia cupana) has been traditionally used as a sexual stimulant, as well as useful in case of physical tiredness, asthenia or fatigue; It is also suitable in case of weakness or apathy. It is a vegetable from the Amazon, it has traditional uses to reduce hunger, relieve pain, reduce premenstrual symptoms, as well as tonic and aphrodisiac properties.

L-Arginine: Arginine raises nitric oxide levels, which facilitates penile erection. Arginine increases vasodilation in the genital area, increasing blood flow in the area. A large percentage of male seminal fluid is made up of arginine. If we add arginine to our diet, sperm count and mobility improve, and therefore, male fertility. Arginine in women's diet improves ovarian response, endometrial receptivity, and pregnancy rate.

Muira Puama: Short-term use increases blood flow in the pelvic area, helping to prolong men's erections, as well as sensation and orgasm in women; In the long term it favors the production of sexual hormones in both sexes. Muira Puama is a true natural aphrodisiac indicated for loss of libido in both sexes.
Maca extract: Maca is a herbaceous plant native to the Andes of Peru and Bolivia, where it is cultivated both for its nutritional qualities and for its fame that its roots have properties that increase fertility and improve libido.
